Leo maintains active practices as both a medical doctor and lawyer, treating vulnerable individuals with brain and spinal cord injuries in both the hospital and courtroom settings. His experience as a highly-respected neurosurgeon adds a unique and invaluable dimension to his legal representation of those who have suffered catastrophic injuries and/or paralysis as result of medical malpractice, truck or car accidents, police misconduct, and other misfortune. He also advises and serves as an expert witness for attorneys across the country, who regularly seek his assistance in cases involving brain and spinal injuries.

Leo performed his neurosurgical residency at Yale University, where he later conducted spinal cord research and held a teaching position at the Yale University School of Medicine. He has also taught at the University of Connecticut and New York University. He later chaired the departments of neurosurgery at St. Vincent Mercy Medical Center and St. Luke's Hospital in Toledo, Ohio.

An accomplished gourmet cook, Leo has taken training courses at the Culinary Institute of America's Greystone Campus in Napa Valley and in kitchens in Italy. He has volunteered in professional kitchens in both Toledo and Detroit.
